Bhondla starts from the first day of Navaratri and being celebrated till Kojagiri pournima. Dressed in festive finery, women and young girls pay obeisance to the elephant — the carrier of the Goddess Parvati, and dance in a circle around her picture or idol. An elephant is drawn either with Rangoli on the soil or with a chalk on a slate and kept in the middle.

The celebration was for the girls and ladies to come together and enjoy talking about daily things. They go around it in a circle, holding each other's hands and singing traditional songs passed down the generations. For example - 'Aad bai aadori...' (a song about well) and another one was about lemons 'Ek limbu jhelu bai, don limba jhelu' (let us catch one lemon, then two lemons.....so on). The last song typically ends with the words '... खिरापतीला

काय ग??' ('What is the special dish today?'). The 'Khirapat' is a special dish brought by everyone by keeping it covered for guessing by the girls except the one who brought it. Once everybody's dish is guessed, then everything is mixed and offered as Prasad.
